History Of L'École L'Eau-Vive

Until the turn of the century, several Christian public schools existed in the province of Quebec. With the dawn of a new millennium, and as the result of efforts to secularize the Quebec school system, public schools lost the right to include religious instruction as a part of their educational projects. Thus, confessional schools had to either close their doors or give up biblical teaching as a part of the curriculum. A small but determined group of courageous believers in Quebec

City stepped out in faith and sought a permit to operate a private confessional school. Defying expectations, the Ministry of Education rapidly issued this permit, authorizing the creation of a private confessional school serving students from preschool through high school. And so, in 2001, L'École L'Eau-Vive, which means "School of Living Water", was born.

L'École L'Eau-Vive today

Today, L'École L'Eau-Vive is the only accredited private Christian school in in Quebec City, a city with over 500,000 people. L'École L'Eau-Vive offers students a quality education while reinforcing the biblical values taught both at home and at church. FBM Missionary Richelle Wright has served at the school in many different capacity and currently serves as the Director of Student Services at L'École L'Eau-Vive. After starting with 72 students in 2001, the school has grown to nearly 400 students today. Their desire is to see young people flourish and succeed as they discover their identity in Christ.

What Is La Rigole

L'École L'Eau-Vive is raising funds to finance a playground for our students. This project is called "La Rigole," a name that comes from their manifesto: "We thirst for child-like hearts." It evokes the joy of outdoor play as well as the contentment and happiness that bubble over as we marvel at God's creation. The French word rigole literally means a gully to channel the flow of water. This is the goal for the playground: a place to channel the overflowing energy of young ones. It is also a play on words as rigoler is the French verb "to laugh."
